

New Mexico Teen Pregnancy Resources

According to a report by KOAT in 2008, New Mexico had the second highest teen birth rate in the country. They suggest that 2 out of every 5 girls in New Mexico will get pregnant at least once before they turn 20 years old. New Mexico counties with the highest teen pregnancy rates were Curry, Lea, and Luna Counties. These are very alarming statistics.

These pages will give you information on Health clinics, WIC offices, clothing banks, and other resources offered by the state.

Public Health Offices offer free, or low cost medical services for those with no medical coverage. Services include birth control, pregnancy testing, and prenatal services. Parents are NOT required, but call for an appointment. Most Public Health offices in New Mexico are also WIC offices. Make an appointment there as well for help with the cost of healthy eating during pregnancy and for baby after it is born.

Income Support Offices offer assistance with the cost of food, medical care, and sometimes cash assistance for low income families. If you still live with your parents then their income must be included on the application. If you do not live at home, then you can apply as an individual and only your income and expenses will be considered.

These locations are also good sources of information about other benefits and assistance programs you may be eligible for. If you are unemployed and need a job then utilize your state employment assistance office. You will get access to jobs posted on the internet, resume writing assistance, fax machines, and you can sometimes even get gas cards, bus passes, and clothing vouchers as well.
